

Theodore Huge

Ted Huge, the son of Harry and Reba Huge, has been a director of the Huge foundation since 2005.

He practices law in Charleston, South Carolina and represents individuals and small businesses on a wide range of legal matters. He is admitted to practice in Virginia, South Carolina, the District of Columbia, and the U.S. Virgin Islands. He attended Duke University where he earned bachelor degrees in public policy and mathematics, was a member of the Kappa Alpha Order fraternity, participated in a variety of club-level sports, and played guitar and bass in a rock band on campus.

Upon graduating from Duke, Mr. Huge relocated to London, England where he conducted financial analysis and business research for a European venture capital fund. He returned to the States to attend Georgetown University to earn his law degree. In law school, he concentrated his studies in international, environmental, and business law.

After graduating from Georgetown, Mr. Huge worked for one year as assistant in-house counsel for an international start-up company based in Washington, D.C. In 1995, he moved to Charleston to take a position as an associate attorney with a large national litigation firm focused on toxic tort, civil racketeering, and consumer protection matters.

In 2007, he left that firm to pursue his current law practice and work for the Foundation. When his time allows, he plays lead guitar for a local rock band in Charleston.